2. OBJECTIVES:

The AIDA project is developing an infrastructure-aware polyglot query engine for the data lake that enables querying heterogeneous data sources for an hybrid cloud/edge environment. In particular, factors such as the distribution of the data (cloud vs edge) and the capabilities of the data sources should be considered in the cost model used for query planning and optimization. The goal is to push-down queries to the backing data sources as much as possible to minimize data transfer, taking advantage of materialization as needed to either overcome limitations in the data sources or minimize query latency. In this context, this project aims at exploring the balance between data synchronization and query delegation.

3. BRIEF PRESENTATION OF THE WORK PROGRAMME AND TRAINING:

Research, design and implement polyglot database systems for Edge computing;
Evaluate and assess the performance of the designed protocols;
Contribute to writing scientific papers.

The tasks described in this work plan require the application and development of concepts and techniques in the area of Computer Science and may contribute to dissertation projects of Integrated Masters in Informatics Engineering or Master in Informatics Engineering.
